

"Kun in America: When, Why and how?"

This should have been the title of my book if I had to write about my first day in America: I said when I left Los Angeles airport to drive to UCLA.

A great change of landscape and people. Incredible but true. White people all around, huge buildings, vehicles driving like termites go to the lights of Africans when they watch them; clear pure drinkable water flowing uselessly, what a paradise like world ever seen! You need to die before knowing where and how human souls live. You need to travel before you know geography of history tells the truth.

A great deal of statements have drawn my attention such as:

1. "Youngsters should change and not want for change from elders."
2. "New generation as each individuals should ask himself what he should do to his community before he dies."
3. "Share your thoughts with others, get rid of your fear and put into practice your thoughts."
4. "The wear make this world exist," said Adam Finck. He went on saying: "It's easy to know, but hard to think."
5. "Don't refuse the task the universe asks of you." This statement sent me to make my own saying that black or white cannot work without brain.

All these statements are pushing me to work hard to teach young people in my community to do the same thing Fourth Estate is doing for our future world building [Zero LRA].

Thus, my trip to America, beginning from the 10th June 2012 when I had to go to Bunia (Congo) to seek for the passport, until the 8 August 2013, date of the beginning of the Leadership Summit, onto the 15th August 2013 has reinforced my faith to God throughout all I've seen, head and done.

It's for sure that "Life is an unspeakable and beautiful mystery in the world."

KUNANGBANGATE BELAHA
San Diego, August 15th 2013